WHAT TO EXPECT
from Group Presentations with Student Well-Being

Before the presentation:
If you are wanting a presentation for your organization or group, you will use the link below to submit a request via Google Form. A staff member from Student Well-Being will reach out to you confirming we have received your request and will work with you to finalize details. You can request that the presentation be held in person (on-campus only) or virtually.

During the presentation:
When you and your group members arrive for a presentation, you will be asked to sign in (either using a paper sign in sheet or Google Form). There may also be a pre-test you will be asked to participate in. This is simply to assess learning outcomes of the presentation and is anonymous. There will be one or more Student Well-Being representatives present to give the presentation, either students, staff, or both. Presentations typically last 50 minutes, though some are longer. Presentations and trainings often ask for participation from audience members and may additionally involve small group activities.

After the presentation:
Immediately following the presentation, you may be asked to complete a post-test (this is only applicable if you were asked to take a pre-test). For certain trainings/training series, you may receive future emails to assess the long-term usefulness of the program, though participation in these future surveys are not required.

Learn more about presentations:
wellbeing.mst.edu/presentations